

Bet365 Bet Builder: how it works

Bet365 Bet Builder 2026 — how to combine markets in one game, available selections, tips and offers for Canadian bettors. Full guide.

Liam Gauthier, Betting Editor · 22.05.2026

TL;DR Bet Builder lets you combine several markets from a single game into one bet, with one combined price set by Bet365 rather than multiplying separate odds. For Canadian bettors that means stacking, say, a Maple Leafs win, an over goals line and a player to score, or a Raptors win with a player points line on the NBA. Because the legs come from one match they are often correlated, and the pricing accounts for that. Bet Builder works across major sports, pre-match and on selected live games, and many builds support Cash Out. This guide explains how to build and check a bet, and why correlated or unrealistic combinations are the main pitfalls.

What Bet Builder is

Bet Builder combines multiple markets within one game into a single wager, priced as a whole by Bet365, so the legs are linked rather than treated as independent bets.

A standard parlay combines selections from different events. Bet Builder is different: every leg comes from the same match. You might take a team to win, the game to go over a goals or points total, and a specific player to record an event, all in one bet on one fixture. Because those outcomes can influence each other, Bet365 calculates a single combined price for the whole build rather than simply multiplying the individual odds together.

- Same-game focus — all selections are drawn from one match, which is why it is often called a same-game multi.
- Operator-set price — the combined odds are calculated by Bet365 to reflect how the legs relate, not by stacking separate prices.
- One bet, one stake — the whole build wins or loses together; every leg must come in.
- Broad sport support — common on hockey, soccer, basketball and other major sports, pre-match and on selected live games.

The appeal is expressing a detailed view of how a single game will unfold — a tight, low-scoring Canadiens win, or a high-scoring Raptors game with a star passing a points line — in one slip at a longer combined price. The trade-off is that the more legs you add, the harder the bet is to land, so a richer story means a lower chance of every part coming true.

Bet Builder is a same-game multi where Bet365 sets one combined price for linked legs, letting you bet a detailed view of a single match in one wager.

Available selections

Builds draw on result and goals markets, totals and handicaps, player markets such as goalscorers or points lines, and team props like corners, cards, shots or rebounds, depending on the sport and fixture.

The selection menu inside Bet Builder varies by sport and by how high-profile the fixture is, but it generally spans three layers. The bigger the game, the deeper each layer goes.

Layer	Examples (hockey / soccer / basketball)
Result and totals	Match winner, puck/point spread, over/under goals or points
Player markets	Anytime goalscorer, player points/shots, assists, threes made
Team and game props	Team to score in a period, total corners or cards, both teams to score

- Result and goals — the backbone of most builds: who wins and how many are scored.
- Player markets — a named player to score, to record a shot on goal, or to clear a points or rebounds line.
- Team props — period or quarter results, both-teams-to-score, and sport-specific stats where offered.

Availability is fixture-dependent. A nationally televised NHL or NBA game will typically expose a wide menu, while a lower-profile match may limit you to the core result, totals and a handful of player markets. Some specific markets are also excluded from Bet Builder even when they exist as standalone bets, because they cannot be priced cleanly alongside others. The list shown in the builder for a given game is the definitive guide to what you can actually combine.

Combine result, totals, player and team-prop markets within one game, with the depth depending on the sport and how high-profile the fixture is.

Building a bet

Open the Bet Builder on a fixture, add selections from the available markets, watch the combined price update, then place the bet — checking the legs are compatible and the price reflects them.

The process is designed to be quick, but a little care at each step avoids the common errors of incompatible legs or a price that surprises you.

1. Open a fixture and select the Bet Builder option, available on supported games pre-match and on selected live events.
2. Add your first selection, for example a team to win, from the in-builder market list.
3. Layer further legs — a goals or points total, a player to score, a team prop — adding markets that fit your view of the game.
4. Watch the combined price recalculate after each addition; it reflects how the legs relate, not a simple multiplication.
5. Review and place — confirm the legs are the ones you intended and the price is acceptable before staking.

A couple of behaviours are worth knowing. If two selections are incompatible or too strongly correlated, the builder may block the combination or grey out a market once another is chosen — that is the system preventing a leg that cannot be priced with the others. The combined price can move as you add or remove legs, and again between building and placing if the market shifts, so check it at the moment of placement. Many completed builds can then be managed with Cash Out once the event is live, letting you settle early if part of your view comes good. Some builds can also be reused or saved as a starting point on similar fixtures.

Add legs inside the fixture's builder, watch the operator-set combined price update, and confirm the selections and number before placing the bet.

Bet Builder offers

Bet365 runs promotions tied to Bet Builder, such as boosts or bonuses on qualifying same-game multis, available pre-match and on live games, with many builds also supporting Cash Out.

Bet Builder is a frequent focus for promotions because it is popular with bettors and naturally produces longer-priced bets. The specific deals change over time and are shown to eligible, logged-in users under Ontario's advertising rules, so treat the following as the usual shapes rather than fixed offers.

- Price boosts — an enhanced combined price on a featured same-game build for a particular fixture.
- Bonus on qualifying builds — a percentage added to winning multis that meet a minimum number of legs and minimum odds.
- Pre-match and live — offers can apply before the game and on selected in-play builds.
- Cash Out support — many Bet Builder bets can be cashed out once live, letting you settle early if conditions suit.

To use these well, opt in where required and read each promotion's own terms, because minimum legs, minimum odds and any cap on the bonus are what determine the real value. As with all promotions, the right discipline is to let an offer enhance a bet you already wanted to make, not to add legs you do not believe in just to qualify. Odds, bonus and terms verified against Bet365's official pages in June 2026; these change, reconfirm before betting. Availability of any specific boost is also fixture-by-fixture, so what is offered on a Saturday NHL card may differ entirely from a midweek soccer fixture.

Bet Builder attracts boosts, qualifying-multi bonuses and Cash Out support, but each offer's terms and per-fixture availability decide whether it is worth it.

Tips and limitations

The main pitfalls are correlated legs that the pricing already discounts, unrealistic many-leg builds, and adding markets to chase a bigger price rather than to express a genuine read of the game.

Bet Builder rewards a coherent view and punishes wishful stacking. A few guidelines keep builds disciplined.

- Understand correlation — legs that tend to happen together (a team winning and its star scoring) are linked, and the operator's price already accounts for that, so the combined odds are shorter than naive multiplication would suggest.
- Keep builds realistic — each added leg lowers the chance of the whole bet landing; a four- or five-leg build can look appealing while being very hard to hit.
- Bet the read, not the price — add markets because you believe them, not to inflate the combined odds.
- Manage risk and stake — same-game multis are higher-variance, so size them as the longshots they often are, and consider Cash Out if part of your view comes good early.
- Watch the menu limits — some markets are excluded or blocked together; the builder will show what can actually be combined.

The honest framing is that Bet Builder is a flexible way to back a specific story about a game, with the convenience of one slip and one operator-set price. It is not a route to easy value: the combined price reflects the linked nature of the legs, and longer builds trade probability for payout. Used to express a real read on a Maple Leafs or Raptors game with two or three legs you really back, it is a strong tool; used to stack improbable legs for a big number, it mostly feeds the variance. Availability, markets and offers vary by fixture, so confirm what is posted for your game before building.

Build two or three legs you really believe, respect that correlation is already priced in, and avoid stacking improbable legs just to chase a bigger combined number.

FAQ

How is the Bet Builder price set?

Bet365 calculates a single combined price for the whole build rather than multiplying separate odds together. Because the legs come from the same game and can be correlated, the operator's pricing accounts for how they relate, which is why the combined odds are usually shorter than a naive multiplication of independent prices would produce.

What can I combine in a Bet Builder?

You can combine markets from a single game, typically result and totals, player markets such as goalscorers or points lines, and team props like corners, cards or period results. The exact menu depends on the sport and how high-profile the fixture is; a nationally televised NHL or NBA game offers far more than a lower-profile match.

Can I cash out a Bet Builder bet?

Many Bet Builder bets support Cash Out once the event is live, so you can settle early if part of your view has come good. Availability is decided market by market and can suspend around key moments, so confirm the Cash Out value is showing on your specific build before relying on it.

Why are some markets greyed out when I build a bet?

When two selections are incompatible or too strongly correlated, the builder blocks or greys out a market once another is chosen, because those legs cannot be priced cleanly together. The list of markets that stay available inside the builder shows exactly what you can combine for that fixture.

Is Bet Builder a good way to find value?

It is a flexible way to express a detailed view of one game, not an automatic source of value. The combined price already reflects how the legs relate, and each extra leg lowers the chance of the whole bet landing. It works best with two or three selections you really back rather than many improbable legs added to inflate the price.
